Lowland

The Lowland region lies south of an imaginary line between Greenock and Dundee. From more than 200 distilleries in the late 19th century, nowadays only a handful are still operating.

Lowland malts are generally lighter in body and flavour than their counterparts from other regions. Since they are not, or only slightly, peated they are an excellent choice for beginners.

Highland

The Highlands covers more than half of Scotland, and the landscape, with all its lakes and mountains, is world famous.

Malts from the northern Highlands are more salty with notes of seaweed, while the whiskies from the east are drier with more body and a little smokiness. Their counterparts from Perthshire are cleaner, lighter and sweeter.

Campbeltown

Before Prohibition started in the US, Campbeltown was home to more than 30 distilleries. Its location made it the ideal place to produce whisky for shipping across the ocean. But with alcohol becoming illegal in the States in 1920, the distilleries in Campbeltown started dying and today there are less than a handful still in production. The malts tend to be dry and full bodied with a distinct smokiness and salty notes.

Islay

Known as “The Queen of the Hebrides” Islay is the southernmost island of the Inner Hebrides and is home to eight working distilleries.

Islay malts are very easy to identify. Heavily peated, very pungent with notes of salt and seaweed on the palate, they sometimes seem to be more of a medicine than a whisky. These malts are equally loved and hated by whisky enthusiasts all over the world.

Island

Strictly speaking the Islands belong to the highland region but are sometimes referred to as a region of its own simply by geographical reasons. The Island region includes all Scottish islands except Islay.

Island malts are hard to define since they all have their own individual style. Most of them are peated but less so than the malts from Islay and they are generally complex and powerful drinks, with spicy and seaweed notes.
